Republicans, democrats unite

JEFFREY RILEY
Online News Editor

Despite being in a politically vicious election year, the College Democrats and College Republicans put aside their differences and each worked on memorial events for the seven-year anniversary of the Sept. 11 terrorist attacks.

At noon Thursday, a small rally was held on the concrete stage outside of the Student Union. Flags and banners were flown from a tent as members of the two organizations listened to people share their memories of the event.

"We felt that it was important to make sure that it was remembered and remembered appropriately," said Justin York, president of the College Republicans, as he spoke to passing students.

York gave a speech expressing the feelings he has

Progressive organizations get active at Memory Mall

Radical Rush, an event held every semester by the Progressive Council, started Sunday and ends today at UCF's Memory Mall.

An umbrella organization for left-leaning political organizations on campus, the Progressive Council acts as a political alternative to the campus' Greek Rush Week. Radical Rush organizers attempt to boost membership of progressive clubs, promote activism for various causes and provide fun events for both new and old members of UCF's Progressive Council clubs.

"It brings an alternative and a place for new students to come in who maybe don't fit in with Greek life or some of the other clubs," said Terri Baldwin, an education major and chair of Campus Peace Action. "It gives them an opportunity to see what all our clubs have offered."

"The movement needs movement," Baldwin said, "and we're kind of stagnate, so we're hoping maybe to jump-start the movement a little bit with some of the on-campus stuff."

Organizations underneath the Progressive Council umbrella include Students for a Democratic Society, Campus Freethought Alliance, Body of Animal Rights Campaigners and CodePink.

A newcomer to Radical Rush is Femnomina, a "radical feminist collective." Radical Rush was organized by the Progressive Council organization Campus Peace Action, an organization dedicated to promoting peace.

The centerpiece of Radical Rush week is Tent City, a group of tents set up at the middle of Memory Mall — a first this year — in which members

High Times associate publisher Cusick praises activism at UCF

Student Union Room 218AB was standing room only Wednesday, as more than 400 UCF students attended a National Organization for the Reform of Marijuana Laws-sponsored speech delivered by Richard Cusick, the associate publisher of High Times magazine.

Cusick complimented UCF's chapter of NORML. "People at High Times know about this place, this chapter, because of your activism," Cusick said. "You are the generation that is going to legalize marijuana, and I know this because I'm standing alongside the gold standard of activism in the United States."

UCF freshman Brenton Rees sat patiently on the floor before Cusick's speech began. "I'm very interested in what he is going to say, just because of who he is," Rees said. "I am not yet a member of NORML, but I think after tonight, I'd like to be."

Prosecutor says South Florida teen killed friend to become serial killer

ORLANDO — A prosecutor says South Florida teen Michael Hernandez killed a friend in a middle school bathroom as part of a plan to become a serial killer.

Miami-Dade Assistant State Attorney Carin Kahgan made that charge Thursday during opening statements at Hernandez's murder trial in Orlando. It was moved out of South Florida because of extensive pretrial publicity.

Kahgan says Hernandez methodically plotted to kill Jaime Gough. Both were eighth graders at the time. Hernandez is now 18.

Defense attorney Richard Rosenbaum argued that Hernandez is mentally ill. He added that evidence will show "this is a classic case of insanity."

If convicted, Hernandez faces up to life in prison. He and his lawyers have turned down plea deals offering 40 years in prison.

Summer Rayne Oakes, environmental expert and board adviser for the Discovery Channel's Planet Green eco-lifestyle network, spoke at a public forum Tuesday at the Union.

KICKING CLIMATE CHANGE

Planet Green host tells students to defy 'Generation Q' label

MARY KATE DANIELS
Contributing Writer

The name Summer Rayne Oakes befits someone with a passion for nature — and it certainly does. Oakes, the host, environmental expert and board adviser to the Discovery Channel's Planet Green network, gave a presentation Tuesday evening urging students to take action in pursuing solutions to climate change.

The presentation titled "We Can Kick Climate Change, One Step at a Time: An Expanding Role for Youth" was in keeping with UCF's Unifying Theme of "The Environment and Global Climate Change." Oakes, a model and author of the upcoming book Style, Naturally: The Global Guide to Sustainable Fashion and Beauty, went beyond the familiar cliché of turning off the water while brushing and recycling cans in her call to action.

Oakes, who graduated from Cornell University with a degree in entomology and environmental science, said she chose her own path and made her own career, rather than focusing on just one aspect of environmentalism. "You don't have to [concentrate on just one thing]," she said. "Do it all."

Oakes opened her presentation, which nearly filled the Pegasus Ballroom, by quoting The New York Times journalist Thomas L. Friedman. He called the current college generation "Generation Q," as in "quiet," and said this is a generation that is "quietly pursuing their idealism, at home and abroad."

"That makes me downright livid," Oakes says. "How dare he define or confine our generation ... and suggest that even for one second that we are quiet, that we are static and that we are silent."

She spent the rest of her discussion pointing out ways to be the change you want to see happen, rather than just talking about it.

Oakes tried to motivate students to take direct action in the fight against climate change. She encouraged students to participate in Power Shift, a four day conference in Washington D.C. that urges politicians to make climate-friendly changes, such as emissions reductions, and the creation of more green jobs. Oakes said green jobs are jobs that "can't be outsourced and help build clean energy."

Power Shift 2009 will take place from Feb. 27 to March 2. Oakes urged students to not only take part in the conference, but also in opportunities to learn leadership in political and lobbying fields.

Summer Rayne Oakes speaks in the Student Union on Tuesday in a forum titled, 'We Can Kick Climate Change, One Step at a Time: An Expanding Role for Youth.' The presentation was part of UCF's environmental unifying theme.

Oakes also suggested taking political action by checking up on local senators and political figures. She suggested the League of Conservation Voters's Web site at <http://www.lvc.org>, where students can see comparative charts of local leaders as well as national politicians.

Oakes summed up her call to action by saying, "We need to put ourselves outside our comfort zone, and make a concerted effort to engage people who may not look like us, who may not think like us, who may not act like us because we might actually learn something."

Oakes also mentioned the Planet Green network, which features shows about eco-friendly topics. Also mentioned was TreeHugger, an eco-friendly Web site recently bought by Discovery Channel that offers green news, tips and merchandise.

Oakes also spoke directly to people who are skeptical of climate change.

"Find what you and that person have in common and build on that," she said. "People who don't believe in global warming or green jobs still want clean water, and want better and steady jobs."

Oakes offered a lot of information to students as far as pursuing passions. She quoted theologian and civil rights activist Howard Thurman by saying, "Don't ask what the world needs, ask what makes you come alive and go do it, because what the world needs is people who have come alive."

Audience members had varied opinions on the subject.

Rachael Sultzman, an environmental studies major, said she believes climate change "is just a natural process the Earth goes through."

Mohammed Alghamdi, an international graduate student, said he did not have "any real opinions on climate change," but was hoping to gain something from the presentation.

"It's a complex issue that we need to resolve within the next couple of decades," senior history major Stephen Ford said. "The direct causes and direct outpourings of it have yet to be seen. It should be interesting. We should do everything we can to get things back on track."

Oakes reiterated throughout the presentation that the world is relying on its youth to get up and make their own change.

"The greatest natural resource," Oakes said, "is the energy and passion and life that is in each and every one of us."

And as she answered in the Q&A that followed, yes, that is her real name.

SDS holds music-based protest at Millican Hall

of Progressive Council camp out. People of the general public are invited to join the camping.

"The whole idea behind Tent City is just to really build a community, play some music and find things that we really share as common ground," Stephanie Donelan from Campus Peace Action said.

"I hope that we can engage a lot of the UCF community to come talk to us," Donelan said. "Maybe find some stuff that they are interested in and have a good time."

The Tent City idea has been done several times in the past by the UCF progressive community, including a set up in 2007 to promote awareness for the genocide in Darfur.

Radical Rush was kicked off Sunday with a concert featuring local bands including the Fling, Open Windows and BWFT. During the week, live music acts performed in front of the tents set up at Memory Mall from 7 p.m.-10 p.m.

On Tuesday, Students for a Democratic Society held a Funk the War March, an anti-war rally similar to the Funk the War and Funk the I-95 protests held in Washington, D.C.

"Funk the War is a specific type of protest where we try to have it be more welcoming to people who are not necessarily so interested in protests," said Austin Smith, a member of Students for a Democratic Society. "It is a lot more music-based. It's supposed to be a lot more fun, but at the same time, it has a message where we talk about how on our very campus itself we're connected to the War on Iraq, we're connected to the War on Terror."

The almost 20 participants of the CodePink holds a meeting outside the Student Union Thursday after their 'Freeze-In' event for Radical Rush. Radical Rush was held on Memory Mall.

march started at UCF's Memory Mall and went through the Student Union, leading up to Millican Hall.

During the march, the protesters played music through a boombox while shouting slogans such as "books, not bombs," "Who's school? Our school," and "bring an end to mad sheeple disease."

The march ended in the lobby of UCF President John Hitt's office. Hitt was not present during the protest. A member of the office staff urged the protesters, who were dancing and playing a boombox, to quiet down, but the protesters did not comply.

The office staff member then picked up the phone to contact the campus police, which persuaded the members of SDS to leave the offices.

"The office didn't like it too much in there," said Stephen Mikan, a Valenica student who participated in the march. "They told us we were not allowed to sing or play our music, so eventually they were calling for security because we weren't complying. But that was what protests is all about."

"I think it's kind of impolite to say that our university president, John Hitt, is a war profiteer," said Justin York, protest witness and Chairman of UCF's College Republicans. "I just think that is a little inappropriate."

On Wednesday, UCF's NORML chapter — an organization that wants to reform marijuana laws — hosted speaker Rick Cusick, the Associate Publisher of High Times.

On Thursday, the seventh anniversary of the Sept. 11 attacks on the World Trade Center buildings, Campus Peace Action showed the film Atomic Café — a 1982 documentary about the Cold War era — on Memory Mall.

"We're going to try and play it a little more low-key, not be quite as controversial," Baldwin said.

Closing off the week today, will be a drum circle at UCF Memory Mall starting at 9 p.m.

His speech inspires

FROM A1

Cusick said that his first experience with marijuana was, "just like a scene taken out of That 70's Show."

"I thought about it for an entire year before I tried marijuana for the first time. I must've been either 16 or 17 years old," Cusick said. "I learned how to smoke sitting in a very small room at a comedy club watching George Carlin. Ironically, the place didn't have a liquor license but allowed you to smoke weed. Little did I know that not only was that the funniest thing I've ever seen, but it would be the funniest thing that I'd ever see."

Cusick went on to speak about his experiences during the past 11 years with High Times, including one about how George Carlin got him his first job with the magazine.

He wrote a question-and-answer interview with Carlin and submitted it to High Times, and it made the cover.

Cusick accidentally sent a copy of his resume and his High Times cover of Carlin to High Times when he was trying to land a job in advertising after the birth of his first child. He got the job.

The magazine was founded in 1974 by Thomas King Forcade. High Times was originally modeled after

SARAH ROGERS / CENTRAL FLORIDA FUTURE
Rick Cusick, publisher of High Times magazine, spoke to more than 400 students at the Key West ballroom.

Hugh Hefner's Playboy magazine, except that rather than catering to just men, it catered to consumers of recreational drugs. Each issue has a centerfold photo, not of a nude woman, but typically of a choice grade of cannabis plant. Forcade would later found NORML before committing suicide in 1978.

Cusick's speech was followed by a standing ovation.

"I thought his speech great and really empowering," UCF sophomore Lindsay Martin, said. "He was a great motivational speaker and very informed."

Junior Jennifer Reed echoed her sentiments.

"He enlightened me, and I definitely gained knowledge," Reed said. "He kept me listening the entire time; his speech beat my expectations. I look forward to becoming an active member of NORML."

Victims asked for help

FROM A1

Michael G. Ruschak. The Seminole County Sheriff's Office opted to do nothing to protect Michael G. Ruschak despite being presented with clear, definite evidence that an attack by Andrew Allred was imminent.

"Such failure to act is in derogation of the duty owed by the Seminole County Sheriff's Office to protect the citizens of Seminole County."

The Seminole County Sheriff's Office released a statement on behalf of Seminole County Sheriff Donald Eslinger.

"The deaths of Tiffany Barwick and Michael Ruschak are a terrible loss for their families and the community as a whole. The person who senselessly took their lives has unconditionally confessed his guilt in open court, and will soon face justice for his crimes. The response by the Seminole County Sheriff's Office in this case was not the cause of the deaths of Tiffany and Michael."

"The Seminole County Sheriff's Office managed this case professionally and within the scope of the law. Our hearts go out to all who have been hurt by this selfish act and it is our hope that the healing process can now begin for the family and friends of Tiffany and Michael."

Ruschak, 22, a pending management information systems major at UCF, and Tiffany Barwick, 19, a Seminole Community College student, were murdered by Barwick's ex-boyfriend Andrew Allred, 21, on Sept. 24 in an Oviedo home on Shady Oak Lane. Deputies found their bodies around 10:30 p.m., when they responded to a call off of Shady Oak Lane.

Allred rammed his truck into Barwick's vehicle and when he couldn't get in the front door, he shot out the glass door in the back of the house. Once inside, he shot Ruschak four times and shot Barwick, who was hiding in the bathroom, seven times. Eric Roberts, a UCF alumnus who survived the shooting, was shot in the right leg.

Seminole County deputies later arrested Allred at his home on Oklahoma Street, three miles from the crime scene.

Both Ruschak and Barwick met with Seminole County Sheriff's Office deputies Sept. 24, asking them for help because Allred was threatening their lives. Allred hacked into Barwick's bank account and also sent death threats to Ruschak. Barwick also received a picture of her covered in bullet holes.

However, the Sheriff's Office declined to arrest Allred on that basis and instead told them to get an injunction against Allred.

"I explained to Ms. Barwick that [Allred's] actions did not meet the necessary elements for a charge of assault, due to his statements not conveying an imminent threat, and as such, I could not arrest him for making these threats," an arrest report states.

Now, almost a year later, Ruschak's parents have filed a notice of claim with SCSO. The claim does not specify how much money the parents are looking for, but it is for at least $15,000.

According to a court transcript, Perry said he did not want to see people "with their rear ends hanging out of their pants." He added: "We're done."

Oklahoma will lose contact to train air traffic controllers

OKLAHOMA CITY — The University of Oklahoma is losing a contract to help train air traffic controllers at the Federal Aviation Administration Academy in Oklahoma City.

OU has held the contract for more than 25 years but the FAA announced Tuesday it is awarding Raytheon Co. a 10-year contract worth about $437 million.

The FAA is consolidating its air traffic controller entry-level training at the academy with field training done across the country.

OU has 372 contract employees in the training program and officials say Raytheon likely will offer jobs to them.

OU vice president Richard Little says the university will try to absorb any employees who are not offered jobs.

Louisville investigating doctorate given to former dean's associate

LOUISVILLE, Ky. — The University of Louisville will look into whether an associate of a former education dean was improperly awarded a doctorate.

The Courier-Journal reported University of Louisville President James Ramsey appointed a committee Wednesday to investigate how John Deasy qualified for the advanced degree, even though he apparently was on campus for only one semester.

University rules specify a doctoral candidate must study for two years at U of L, including at last one year of full-time residency.

Deasy gave former education Dean Robert Felner's research center a $375,000 contract in 2002.

Felner resigned in June to take a job in Wisconsin, but he withdrew from that position after news of a federal investigation into how he spent grant money became public.

Recent attack makes 2008 deadliest year for Americans

KABUL, Afghanistan — An insurgent attack on a compound in eastern Afghanistan killed a U.S. soldier, bringing the year's death toll to 112 and making 2008 the deadliest for American forces in Afghanistan since the 2001 invasion.

The NATO-led force said the soldier was killed Thursday in eastern Afghanistan "when insurgents attacked a compound." It provided no other details. A Western military official said the soldier was American.

Taliban attacks this year have turned more brazen, sophisticated and powerful.

Thursday's death brings to 112 the number of troops killed this year, surpassing last year's record death toll of 111.

Some 33,000 U.S. troops are stationed in Afghanistan, the highest level since 2001.

Kim Jong Il recovering after stroke that lead to brain surgery

SEOUL, South Korea — North Korea's Kim Jong Il had brain surgery after a stroke last month and could have partial paralysis on one side, media reports said Thursday, after the South Korean government said the communist leader remained in control of his country.

Foreign doctors, possibly from China and France, performed the operation after Kim, 66, collapsed about Aug. 15, the newspapers Dong-a Ilbo and JoongAng Ilbo reported, citing unidentified government officials.

Kim's condition has improved, and he is not suffering from slurred speech, a disability often associated with a stroke, the reports said.

If Kim were incapacitated, it could have serious implications for international negotiations on North Korea's nuclear disarmament.

The talks recently hit a snag because of a dispute between North Korea and the U.S. over how to verify the North's nuclear programs, and a delay by Washington in its promised removal of North Korea from a list of nations that sponsor terrorism.

Bolivian president calling for expulsion of U.S. ambassador

LA PAZ, Bolivia — Bolivian President Evo Morales is calling for the expulsion of the U.S. ambassador for allegedly encouraging anti-government protesters.

Morales says he has asked his foreign minister to send a note to the ambassador, Philip Goldberg, asking that he leave the country.

Bolivia's leftist president did not offer specific evidence on Wednesday in leveling the accusations.

His relations with Goldberg have been chilly ever since the American arrived in 2006.

Bolivia has been rocked for two weeks by increasingly violent protests led by Morales opponents in the country's more prosperous eastern lowlands.

The fight is over natural gas revenues and Morales' insistence that fallow farmland be given to landless Indians.

Confidant says Israeli leader will step down for successor

JERUSALEM — A confidant of Prime Minister Ehud Olmert says the Israeli leader will step down "immediately" after his party chooses a successor this month.

The comment Thursday shoots down speculation that Olmert would try to linger in office for months.

The Olmert confidant says the Israeli leader will formally resign "immediately following the primary." He spoke on condition of anonymity because the Israeli leader has not made his plans public.

Passengers evacuated from English Channel, officials say

PARIS — Officials say a fire broke out in the tunnel under the English Channel and caused undersea traffic to be suspended, but all passengers have been evacuated safely.

Eurotunnel, the company that operates the tunnel, says firefighters quickly extinguished the blaze. An official with Eurotunnel's press service says the fire broke out 7 miles from the French side.

The official says 32 people were aboard a shuttle train transporting trucks when the fire broke out, and all were evacuated safely.

Traffic in the undersea tunnel has been suspended and firefighters are examining the site.

Israeli police believe they found body of missing 4-year-old

JERUSALEM — Israeli police believe they have found the body of a 4-year-old French girl whose disappearance has transfixed the nation.

Police have been searching for Rose Pizam for weeks after arresting her paternal grandfather and mother in the case.

The pair are lovers, and the grandfather has told police he accidentally killed the girl in a fit of rage and threw her body in a suitcase in Tel Aviv's Yarkon River.

Police spokesman Mickey Rosenfeld says divers found a suitcase on Thursday and discovered bones inside. He says the remains are being taken to a lab for identification.

The sordid details of the case have horrified Israel. Israeli TV channels and radio stations interrupted their programming to go live with the discovery of the suitcase.

Frog thought to be extinct found in north Australia

SYDNEY, Australia — A tiny frog species thought by many experts to be extinct has been rediscovered alive and well in a remote area of Australia's tropical north, researchers said Thursday.

The 1.5 inch-long Armoured Mistfrog had not been seen since 1991, and many experts assumed it had been wiped out by a devastating fungus that struck northern Queensland state.

But two months ago, a doctoral student at James Cook University in Townsville conducting research on another frog species in Queensland stumbled across what appeared to be several Armoured Mistfrogs in a creek, said professor Ross Alford, head of a research team on threatened frogs at the university.

Conrad Hoskin, a researcher at The Australian National University in Canberra who has been studying the evolutionary biology of north Queensland frogs for the past 10 years, conducted DNA tests on tissue samples from the frogs and determined they were the elusive Armoured Mistfrog.

Aberle focuses on positive thinking, healthy living weight and eating since she was 7 years old, after the divorce of her parents. The torment of her fellow students and the ridicule she endured pushed her to food for comfort. Without admitting there was a problem, her weight only continued to grow.

"No one was going to help me fight the physical and emotional battle," Aberle said, "if I didn't recognize it myself."

Her weight grew even more when she was working at Starbucks and munching broken pastries while drinking Frappuccinos too frequently.

"Before I knew it, I was over 200 pounds," Aberle said.

Eventually, she resorted to finding diet pills left over in drawers and eating once a day, to the point where she experienced tremors.

When Aberle first heard of the NBC show, she thought the show title was horrible. How mean could they be to call their contestants big losers?

There was also an aspect of denial involved as she watched the overweight contestants.

"I'm big, but not that big," Aberle said.

But after watching and seeing the contestants working hard to shed pounds and realizing that some of their height and weight ratios were very close to her own, Aberle became interested in trying.

After nearly making it on the show two seasons in a row, only to be rejected at the final stage, she almost gave up hope, even when they called her again for the fifth season.

Her cousin joined her at the tryouts for the couple-themed season and, once again, they made it to the final stage.

Aberle made it; her cousin did not.

Aberle was paired up with Salazar, and they were treated as the 10th mystery couple on the show. While they had never met before, they eventually developed a friendship and a partnership.

Aberle enhanced her theme of keeping positive influences around by informing the crowd that just before going on the show she broke up with her boyfriend of several years to remove his negative attitude from her life.

Now Aberle focuses on keeping people like Salazar and her trainer, Jillian Michaels, in her life.

"If people think you're changing," Aberle said, "well, maybe you are, but it needs to be for the better."

Salazar joined Aberle at the podium to share his experiences as well. He does not share the story often, but he told the crowd about his own personal loss of a loved one to anorexia. The personal connection and loss to the disorder impacted his life.

Salazar said the loss made him realize he was dealing with his own stress similarly, only to the opposite extreme.

Above all, he stressed to the audience that anyone can achieve their goals and they are worth the effort.

"We all possess the power to change," Salazar said.

Members of Kappa Alpha Theta were inspired by the contestants' success and found comfort in their message of support. Some were fans of the show already, and favored the two.

Mandy Rucker, a senior elementary education major, felt that they related very well to them.

"She reminded us first and foremost to please yourself," Rucker said. "You're doing it for yourself."

Pam Androff, a senior mechanical engineering major, was a fan of the show and the team.

"I watched the show and Brittany and Bernie were my favorite team," Androff said. "Brittany was one of the most inspirational characters on the show."

Androff felt the most important message Aberle brought was to surround yourself with positive people.

According to Alicia Rose, the Kappa Alpha Theta event coordinator for the speech, the sorority applied for a grant to bring in speakers. They decided on Aberle and Salazar for their experience and celebrity influence.

"I love the show, and Brittany was such a personal inspiration," Rose said.

Aberle spoke with about the importance of getting out and speaking to groups like the UCF sororities.

"To me," Aberle said, "it's that not only was I given the opportunity to lose weight, change my life and create healthy friendships that will last a life time, I'm able to come here and share my story, past, present and future, with these girls."

Salazar agreed and joined Aberle on the trip to Orlando to help support her. Both said throughout their speeches that the support they gave each other was the key to their success.

"It's one of those things where you can't do things alone," Salazar said.

ent and innovation, and every day I am so happy, and I just thank God every day that I live in this great country, and I hope you do too."

After a few students gave their personal accounts and stories about what they remember feeling after the attacks, patriotic songs were played, including "Living in America" by James Brown and "Proud to be an American," by Lee Greenwood.

The Conservative Knights helped the College Republicans organize the rally.

They also collaborated to set up a memorial on the south side of the Reflection Pond near the library.

It was a collection of 2,977 miniature flags planted in the ground — one for each person who died in the attacks.

The flags were purchased through the Young America's Foundation, a conservative organization.

"We've had lot of people actually come up and thank us for doing this," said Joshua Johnson, vice chairman of the College Republicans. "We've not had a single person come up and say anything negative. We had a few people come up and ask us why the flags are up here, so we've had to explain that to them."

The flag memorial was placed in the same location last year, and Johnson said the event will be done again in the future.

"We plan on doing this every single year," Johnson said.

Joshua Parrish, a 22-year-old health sciences major, also stood in the courtyard of the Student Union, wearing a large red, white and blue hat.

Parrish was giving out information and DVDs on the idea that the investigations into the Sept. 11 attacks were incomplete and involved a government conspiracy.

"I'm just trying to raise awareness about a truth," Parrish said. "There are a lot of Parrish said that he normally has to be the aggressor when spreading the word, but he has had a few people sign up to receive e-mails.

The e-mails are collections of information sent out from Parrish's Hotmail account.

Across the front area of the Student Union, the College Democrats had a booth set up as it normally does.

At 8 p.m. Thursday, they hosted a candlelight vigil in front of the Reflection Pond.

The College Republicans also helped with preparations of the vigil, Jay Shannon said. Shannon is a member of the College Democrats.

"The idea behind the whole movement today on the Democrat side is 'Remember the fallen,' " Shannon said. "That's sort of the unofficial theme of the night."

Shannon said the vigil, which happened at press time, will be quiet and peaceful, with candles given out to those that show up and a moment of silence.

Women's soccer to face 2 ranked foes

WILLIAM PERRY
Staff Writer

After playing four of its first five games on the road, the UCF Women's Soccer team will begin a three-game homestand tonight as it will take on Illinois State at 7 p.m.

The Knights (3-1-1) just finished up a two-game swing in California, where they beat Pacific and tied the University of California-Davis. Tonight, they welcome the Illinois State Redbirds, who are 3-3-0 and are making their first ever trip to Florida.

After getting off to an electric 3-0 start, the Redbirds have fizzled since by losing their last three contests.

The Redbirds are led by the steady play of goalie Katie Grill-Donovan.

Grill-Donovan has made 25 saves to go along with her 1.09 goals-against average in five decisions (2-3-0). She was named the Missouri Valley Conference Defensive Player of the Week last week.

However, the Knights have a fine goalie of their own. Aline Reis has been a staple on the team. Despite being only a redshirt freshman, she has settled in very nicely. She is 3-1-1 on the year with three shutouts and a 1.34 goals-against average.

Her GAA is slightly skewed though, because after allowing five goals to Florida State, she has allowed only two goals through the past four games.

Five games into their 2008 slate, the Knights are past the beginning stage of the season. They've played well thus far but will need to take the next step as they enter this tough stretch of their schedule. After playing Illinois State, UCF will host two ranked teams, No. 18 Illinois on Sunday at noon, and No. 21 Kansas on Sept. 19 at 7 p.m.

The Fighting Illini won their first four games of the season, but come to Florida off a loss to the Tennessee Volunteers. The Fighting Illini are scheduled to play the University of Florida tonight in Gainesville.

Kansas heads into today's matchup with Missouri State with a perfect 4-0 record. The Jayhawks have outscored their opponents 11-3. They will face the Knights in the fourth game of a seven-game road trip.

"The key for us is just bringing it every game," UCF assistant coach Colby Hale said. "That means treating Illinois State the same way that we treat Illinois and the same way that we treat Kansas. With us developing the consistency, we have the ability to play with anybody.

"We just need to develop the consistency where we bring our best game, every game. If that happens, then our expectation is to have a chance to compete and have a chance to win all three of those games."

The Knights have improved since losing their season opener, and the coaches will look to fine tune aspects that may hold the team back. While the Knights haven't been scoring at will, they have been doing just enough offensively to end up on top.

Hale said the team will need to incorporate more of an attack and score more goals to be successful down the stretch. The Knights have been outscored 7-5 this season.

"I think it's just kind of finding our rhythm," Hale said. "The offense is always the last thing that comes together. We have the pieces in place; it's just a matter of them getting comfortable with each other."

IT KEPT GOING AND GOING ...

Redshirt freshman goalkeeper Aline Reis allowed two goals in UCF's most recent game. That snapped her scoreless streak of 366 minutes and 30 seconds.

Junior midfielder Becca Thomas has scored three of the Knights' five goals so far this season. She is the team leader in points and shots on goal.

UCF sweeps Wildcats, prep for FIU tourney

RYAN BASS
Staff Writer

It was a different atmosphere at home for the UCF Volleyball team than last week, to say the least. There were 303 fans in the Venue on Wednesday night as opposed to 1,568 who came out two weeks ago to see No. 2-ranked Stanford. And Bethune-Cookman is no Stanford.

The results were also a little more in UCF's favor.

Behind strong offense play from middle blockers Jenny Heppert and Lauren Williams, the Knights (4-4 overall) defeated in-state foe Bethune-Cookman (1-8) in three straight sets — 25-16, 25-13 and 25-9. Both Heppert and Williams each racked up 10 kills, but Williams was the story of the night as she recorded a career-high .769 hit percentage. That ranks fifth all-time for a single match in school history.

"As we get into the conference season for us to be successful, we can't be so dependent on our outside hitters," UCF head coach Todd Dagenais said. "... Both Lauren Williams and Jenny Heppert had career-type nights. I thought we did a really nice job of finding ways to getting them the ball and making it successful."

UCF hit a season-high .376 for the match and outkilled the Wildcats 46-27. Outside hitter Erin Campbell notched a match-high 13 kills, and setter Lauren Rosenthal also played her best match of the young season, registering a season-high 35 assists. The Knights improved to 15-0 all-time against the Wildcats and won their first match of the season that took less than five sets.

"Five-setters are important because that shows mental toughness and we are happy to win those," Heppert said. "When we win [three-set matches], that means that we went out and executed, and that's what we wanted to do today."

The Knights executed well throughout the entire match. After UCF won the first two sets, it looked as though Bethune-Cookman was determined to extend the match. The Wildcats scored the first point of the third

The Knights didn't let up on either side of the net the rest of the way as they forced the Wildcats to hit .077 for the final set.

With tennis, it's all about the spring season. That's when conference and national championships are won and lost. The spring schedule for the UCF Men's Tennis team was announced Thursday.

But in preparation for the spring, the Knights will compete in five fall tournaments, beginning Sept. 19, including their own UCF Invitational.

UCF's fall slate begins Sept. 19 with the four-day Southern Intercollegiate in Athens, Ga. The following week, Sept. 26, the Knights will head to Tampa as the University of South Florida will host the USF Invitational.

The Knights are then expected to participate in the D'Novo All-American Championship from Oct. 3-6 in Tulsa, Okla., before playing their final fall contest away from home at the C.L. Varner Memorial Invitational in Winter Park.

The Knights' fall season ends at the UCF Tennis Complex with the three-day UCF Invitational, which runs from

ANDY JACOBSON / CENTRAL FLORIDA FUTURE
Claudio Romano had a stellar freshman spring season for the Knights. He was victorious in 12 singles matches and defeated 3 ranked foes. UCF's fall season starts Sept. 19.

Oct. 31-Nov. 2. LSU, Florida Atlantic and Georgia Southern are scheduled to compete in the tourney. The Tigers ended the spring season ranked No. 18 in the nation.

UCF's meeting with the Owls will give them a chance to go against former assistant coach Brandon Stokes. After spending two years as an assistant coach with the Knights, Stokes agreed to become FAU's men's tennis coach on June 4.

The Knights played very well on their home court during the 2008 spring season.

They went 7-2 at the UCF Tennis Complex, including two victories against ranked squads, and finished the season as winners in four of their final five home matches.

The Knights went 12-9 in 2008, 2-3 in Conference USA, and defeated three nationally ranked teams. They won 12 matches for the second consecutive season and reached the semifinals of the conference championship for the first time since joining C-USA in 2005.

The Knights will have to deal with the departure of four-year player Sinan Sudas, but they will be able to lean on a couple of sophomores in Claudio Romano and Blaze Schwartz.

Romano finished the spring season tied for second on the team with 12 singles victories. As a freshman, Romano went 10-0 at the No. 5 spot, giving him the most victories at that spot in C-USA. Romano also won 11 doubles matches and defeated three players who were ranked in the top 60 in the nation.

Schwartz had to work through an injury after a productive fall season in 2007. But once he returned in March, Schwartz claimed victory in six consecutive singles matches and finished the spring with a 9-2 overall mark in singles action.

Also returning to the team will be seniors Tarek Ben Soltane and Brock Sakey. They led the Knights in singles victory with 14 and 13, respectively. Ben Soltane was especially dominant in the spring with a mark of 14-3 in singles matches.

Offense looks for more rhythm

FROM A7

"But overall, we would say we're on target with our development as a team."

UCF has been outshot in every game but one and a few of those were by a rather large margin. Hale said the coaches aren't as concerned about being outshot as they are about the players creating chances for themselves.

"We're not as concerned about being outshot, mainly because a lot of the chances that other teams are taking, especially in California, were from 45 yards out," Hale said. "We're more concerned with us creating chances. Take out Florida State, we've only given up two goals in four games."

UCF's specialty so far has been late-game heroics. The Knights have scored a number of late goals in the last few minutes of games, but only time will tell how long the team can survive that way. Normally it's not something a team, can count on.

"I think it says a lot about the team," Hale said. "We gave a goal against UC-Davis and then scored 2 or 3 minutes later. The team's just not really affected by adversity."

"We've been through some this year. It's really just a testament to them and their mental toughness."

UCF will have to survive the next stretch of games in order to keep its current unbeaten streak of four alive.

To do so, the Knights will need to create offensive chances, continue steady their defensive play and hope Reis keeps up her solid play in net

BEASTY BOY

Ladies and gentlemen you are listening to the NightBeast; welcome

WHITNEY HAMRICK
Variety Editor

The evening of Sept. 4 woke the NightBeast, a creature wearing broad rimmed glasses and a cut off Dracula tuxedo shirt to show of his tattoos. He stalked the stage at BackBooth, rhyming his bewildered prey into submission.

"Everyone cheer for me," NightBeast said while consulting his Paul Frank iPod cover to decide the next song.

Nick Testa, 26, has worked as a guitar tech for the past four years for such bands as Punchline, Metro Station, Brand New, Say Anything and Hawthorne Heights. Testa features Hawthorne Heights on his latest album.

"That's what I usually do," Testa said. "I don't tour with my own music, this is my first tour. Hopefully, I can do more."

On tour with Hit the Lights, NightBeast performed "Inuit I'm Into It," "Love Panda Style," "NightBoast" and "Run-away," off his debut album, Inside Joke for Outside Folks, sold exclusively at Hot Topic and released on Thriving Records.

"Most of the time when I write lyrics, I'll write a little bit and then I'll let it sit for a while, and then I'll write more later on," Testa said. "I hardly ever write one song all the way through. It's usually stuff I've thought up over years or weeks or whatever, however long it takes for me to write a song."

The album is a compilation of the inner workings of Testa's brain and sense of humor.

"I wrote some songs, like goofy, a few years ago just for fun and it's like a fun alter ego for me because I'm pretty shy in person," Testa said. "I don't talk a whole lot and when I get on stage it's like a whole different thing, I curse a lot, cuss people out and I wouldn't do that in real life. It makes for a better stage presence than meek bearded dude."

Testa ended the night with his favorite song to perform: a cover of "Kiss the Girl" from The Little Mermaid, switching to a death metal deep throat guttural at one point.

"This song's not by me, it's by a crab named Sebastian," Testa said.

Testa has always been an individual in the weird sense of the term, laughing to himself about random thoughts that pop into his head at least two or three times an hour, some of which he later turns into lyrics, he said.

"It's just kind of how my brain works," Testa said. "I'm not a serious dude and I'm not incredibly smart so I write about stuff I know about. Except for Eskimos, I really don't know any Eskimos but I thought it was funny to talk about Eskimos because they really don't get any play. I just write about stuff I like, and it kind of works."

The following inspired the line, "What's more fowl than a chicken and three ducks? Acid Reflux, acid reflux," for a song called "Reflux Capacitor."

"I love water fowl, this is really weird," Testa said. "I really like ducks. Ever since I was a little kid, I've always liked ducks, and I also have terrible heart burn, terrible acid reflux all the time. I like word play and stuff like that so it just kind of worked. I was shoveling snow in a really bad snowstorm in Ohio, so I'm shoveling snow and that line came to me, and I thought it was really funny, so I wrote it down."

Testa became the NightBeast one night spending his time at a bar he used to go to in Dayton, Ohio, where he lives. The set scheduled for the night's entertainment proved so awful that the drunk Testa found himself compelled to jump on tables, yell and throw things at the band.

The bouncer arrived to escort him out stating something along the lines of "ah, night beast, I don't know what you are, get out of here." There after Testa became the NightBeast. "I heard that name and I thought it was hilarious," Testa said. "I didn't really remember it, but my friends told me about it later."

His tattoos, as well as his lyrics, help to define his personality.

Tattoos of illustrations from Maurice Sendak's children's books adorn his arm. The most familiar, from Where the Wild Things Are, were highlighted on his shoulder in the changing accent lights on stage.

On his left arm is a shark tattoo with braces and a deep-sea diver with a toothbrush next to a manatee. Another tattoo etched on his right ankle is of himself as a child with coke-bottle glasses and script reading, "The story of my life," spilled ice cream and an empty cone in hand. Ever since he got the tattoo, Testa says his luck has changed for the better.

"I've been writing a bunch of music, but I haven't written the lyrics yet," Testa said referring to his next installment as NightBeast. "On the road, it's real simple to write music on long drives. I just put my headphones on and start writing music. It's weird it's really weird the music that's coming up now. I don't know if people are going to like it, but I like it, so who knows?"

Vegans and meat eaters alike can enjoy Ethos

JONATHAN HOHENSEE
Staff Writer

In front of Lake Ivanhoe in downtown Orlando is Ethos Vegan Kitchen, a new restaurant that offers a wide range of hearty meat-free dishes like Sheep's Pie (a meat-free Shepherd's Pie), A Fungus Among Us (Grilled portobello mushrooms) and pecan-encrusted eggplant.

"I try to come as often as I can. I try to come once a week," Ethos customer Veronica Santiago said. "The people are awesome, they are honest. It's like a big community here."

Veganism is a type of vegetarianism in which none of the food products come from animal sources. That eliminates foods such as honey, cheese and eggs.

In 2008, Orlando Weekly

Ethos says it is Central Florida's only fully vegan restaurant. The objective of Ethos is to provide a variety of fresh and delicious vegan food at a reasonable price that anyone can enjoy.

chose Ethos as the newspaper's pick for the best vegan/vegetarian venue in Orlando, and the newspaper's readers voted the restaurant the No. 1 Orlando vegan venue and their No. 3 pick of the best breakfast in Orlando.

After three years of planning, husband and wife owners Kelly and Laina Shockley opened Ethos in 2007 on the day after Christmas.

"I've been a vegan for about seven years now, something like that," Kelly Shockley said. "And I always wanted to open up a restaurant, and I owned a vegan hot dog stand downtown for a while, so I saw that there was a demand for this type of cuisine, so we decided to open this up."

Kelly said he adapted to the diet for moral, ethical, environmental and health reasons.

He stresses that people who come to their restaurant do not have to be vegan or vegetarian to enjoy dining there.

"I don't necessarily think that people should eat vegan food," Shockley said. "I don't try to tell anybody to do anything. We're just trying to offer an option to people."

The restaurant keeps true to its name by operating under what the Shockleys feel to be ethical business practices. In addition to serving vegan food, the restaurant also uses primarily organic foods, uses only sweatshop-free clothing for the store's uniforms and is a member of the city of Orlando's Green Business Program. They also provide a worker-friendly environment by paying their employees a living wage as opposed to minimum wage and providing a safe, comfortable and equitable workplace for the workers.

"It's a really good atmosphere," said Jeff McNulty, Ethos's prep cook. "Everyone gets along really well, we are treated well. We all care about the place, so we all work together very well."

Ethos Vegan Kitchen is located at 1235 N Orange Ave., Suite 101. They are open Monday through Saturday from 11 a.m. to 10 p.m.

Open mic night as a hip-hop art form

SHAUN BEVAN
Staff Writer

The lyrical flow of freestyle verse is open to everyone during Austin's Coffee and Film's hip-hop open mic on Monday nights.

The Winter Park open mic session started about four months ago and was conceived as an opportunity to promote a much-loved art form in the local community, said Jacob Readinger, aka Shlyface, one of the creators of the session.

"We wanted to create an environment that was nurturing for people who have never freestyled before," Readinger said. "They could come in and have people clap for them and not just tell them they're terrible at freestyling, even though they have never done it before."

Readinger, along with Danny Berliner, aka Self-Conscious, hosts the Monday night session in front of a crowd of hip-hop fans and coffee drinkers. When there are no takers for the open microphone, Readinger and Berliner freestyle against the background of mixed beats coming from a laptop. Each takes turns freestyling verses, often playing off each other's lyrics as if it were a freestyle battle but with no casualties.

Scott Pausal aka Rubox, a local beat boxer and event promoter, said places like Austin's

Coffee are a perfect spot for people starting out.

"Places like this are a starting-off point to build your craft at what you do as an artist," Pausal said. "Going to an open mic is a great way to experiment to see how the audience reacts and to see how good the next person is compared to you."

Readinger also pointed out that the competitive nature of the hip-hop world can create some confusion for new artists.

"The hip-hop world is a very competitive art form in general," Readinger said. "A lot of it is geared toward competition, so it innately creates factions among the community, so a new person doesn't know who or where to go to."

The hip-hop sessions at Austin's Coffee openly welcome newcomers to the microphone.

Matt Fugina, aka Fugi, a Titusville resident who has been rapping for about a year, enjoys the friendly atmosphere of Austin's Coffee.

"Compared to the other open mics I have been to, this one is a more welcoming environment," Fugina said. "People don't talk a lot of smack to each other, and it's more about the fun and laughter."

The environment becomes an outlet for people who rap about unusual things or for the people who like to produce quirky stuff, Readinger said.

The open mic also open up opportunities for local hip-hop artists to be featured during the sessions. On Monday, the hip-hop duo Not Them, consisting of J.C. Aviles, aka Gentleman J and Nelson Stowe, aka The Dirt Merchant, performed a few of their songs in front of a packed coffee-shop crowd. Not Them said open mic sessions were a pivotal "life experience" moment in their career.

Not Them said they don't fit the stereotypical image of a hip-hop group. This unorthodox image sparked the origin of their name.

"When we go up on stage, we don't fit the exact mold of hip-hop or rap ... so when we get up on stage they think, 'Not them, they don't do hip-hop,'" Stowe said.

For individuals and groups like Not Them, an open mic session is a perfect spot to display their talents, Pausal said.

"I've met some people who need a little work, but of those who I remember I get their contact information and if I'm putting an event together, I'll give them a call," Pausal said.

Pausal often brings together different groups from the local hip-hop scene, from MCs to DJs to graffiti writers.

But the underground hip-hop scene is a culture often overshadowed by the spotlight of mainstream hip-hop, where the music takes second place to fame. These open mic sessions are a way to change that mentality, Berliner said.

"Hip-hop is something you live," Berliner said. "The hip-hop scene and the music scene should be one of the same. I still think a lot of people who are traditionally focused on hip-hop don't see how independent artists can do [what we do] and call it hip-hop. They think it's a travesty to have anything like this."

"For these guys to just keep doing the same things as the guys before them, they're promoting this stereotype of what hip-hop is and what a rapper should say or do. It's just not accurate. I think it has to do with keeping hip-hop and music synonymous with each other instead of making hip-hop a degenerate form of music."

For the people who got up on the stage that Monday night, it was more about the blending of cultures than the stereotype. For Fugina, it was about the message.

"If I had a positive message, then I would work at it and try to reach people and make a difference," Fugina said.

Venue open to young artists

JONATHAN HOHENSEE
Staff Writer

For more than a year inside of a small, blue real-estate building in down town Orlando, the best and brightest of the Orlando art scene has been shown off at The Gallery at Metro to both appreciators of art and condo seekers alike.

"Our goal is to help promote local artists in the community," said Jon Shehan, the man who first created the gallery. "My dedication was to give some young artists in the city a nice place to show. They don't have a lot of places to show."

Shehan's gallery is just a part of what he describes as being his "hybrid" business that is part real estate offices, part art gallery and mortgage offices.

"The idea was pretty simple. My idea was when I started selling condos downtown at Metro City was that when I showed some of these nice condos there would be these white walls, just barren and blank," Shehan said. "So I came up with the concept to start a true gallery."

"Before that, there haven't been any galleries in Orlando, so to speak of." Shehan also stressed that anyone can observe the art at the Gallery at Metro for free.

"We get walk-ins all of the time ... it's not just for local businesses or condo seekers. It's for whoever wants to come in," Shehan said. "We have some people drive over from all over town."

Every third Thursday of the month, a "Third Thursday Art Walk" reception is held at the Metro offices.

New art for the month is revealed along with servings of wine and cheese with a chance to socialize and network with other art appreciators in the Central Florida scene.

"I love it, I love that every month there is something different," said Laura Clark, Jon Shehan's sister who works at the same office. "I think that, from a lot of the feedback that I get back, that it's what people like about it. That it's all local artists and that it changes out every month."

Currently being exhibited at Metro is the work of Reflections, an art group from South Florida that features impressionistic paintings of beachfront landscapes.

Past themes to be featured at the gallery includes a dance theme, a children's show and art from the Queer Artists Collective.

In October 2007, the gallery held a "Mini Art Contest" where the Metro Art Gallery sent out 50 blank tiny canvases to local artists, who attempted to make art using the 3 inches by 3 inches frame.

For this October, the gallery plans to go the opposite route and sent out extremely large blank canvases for the artists to paint on.

On average, the gallery showcases between 50-70 pieces of art from 25-30 artists at one time.

"Since I have been doing it, I have seen the amount of artists [in Orlando] just grow and grow and grow, this seems to be a Mecca for artists," said Brad Biggs, the gallery's curator of The Metro.

"This is a great job working as an art promoter because, since it is still growing, there is a lot of new ground you can actually open up versus some established cities where it's been so opened up that nothing is new."

The next scheduled group-show will showcase the works of the Orlando Camera Club.

The Gallery at Metro is located on 323 E Church St. in and is open Mondays through Fridays from 9 a.m. to 5 p.m.
